Part 1: Getting Started with Your Company Story

Building Your Growth Strategy Roadmap

Getting Started

“The question is not what you look at, but what you see.”

---- Henry David Thoreau

Sometimes knowing where to start is the hardest part of starting. It's like being taunted by a very large blank screen.

When we meet with a new client, the conversation centers around our client's company. Understanding why they do what they do every day frames the long-term plans and practical actions we create together. The products and services we provide are not even discussed. Selling solutions without clearly defining a problem to solve guarantees a short-lived relationship.

Let's start by discovering what drives your company day after day.

Tips to Make the Most of This Workbook

1. If you're like most company leaders, the questions will seem simple. The answers can feel frustrating. Relax. Enjoy the time to lean back and reflect.
 2. Think like your customers. The products and services you deliver are there to create a lasting customer relationship. Tell your story the way they --- not you --- want to hear it.
 3. Replace "we" with "you". You will be amazed at how this simple word shift changes your story.
 4. Involve your team. Everyone brings a valuable perspective and exchanging them can be eye-opening.
 5. No grades are given for right answers. No red ink for bad ones.
 6. No bonus points for saying what you think someone wants to hear. Speak truthfully to your customers.
 7. Have fun with this. You're on your way to telling your company's story. The results will surprise you.
